

Megan C. Sellers | Deputy County Executive, Oakland County

Megan C. Sellers serves as Deputy County Executive for Oakland County, bringing more than a decade of public-sector experience to her work at the intersection of government leadership, community engagement, and public trust.

In her executive role, Sellers oversees Public Communications, Community Engagement and serves as the administration's liaison to the Oakland County Board of Commissioners. She serves as an Executive advisor on major cross-functional initiatives, including the county's Pontiac Redevelopment Project, a $174+ million-dollar transformational investment project that will relocate key government operations and 700 employees to downtown Pontiac.

Throughout her career, Sellers has focused on strengthening the connection between government institutions and residents while advancing transparency, accountability, and meaningful civic engagement. She previously served within Oakland County's Water Resources Commissioner's Office and Board of Commissioners and has also held leadership roles in both the non-profit, and the hospitality and tourism sectors before entering county government.

Sellers earned a bachelor's degree in Communications from Michigan State University, with a specialized focus on organizational communication and public relations, and is a Certified Public Manager graduating from Saginaw Valley State University. She is also a TEDx speaker whose talk, "10 Minutes to Impact: Igniting Change Where You Stand", challenges individuals to recognize their ability and responsibility to create meaningful change in every space and place they occupy.

Sellers brings a government and community-centered perspective to conversations about responsible leadership, organizational decision-making, accountability and public trust in an evolving legal landscape.
